

The Kwan Yin Journey

Bonus Call: October 13, 2013

Hi everybody, it's Tim of Kwan Yin Healing, and we're here for our second bonus question and answer session. We're going to look at a couple of things that people brought up over the last couple of weeks. Some of this is on the vague side, but that's okay.

Nikki raised the question that after having some pretty intense experiences and feeling pretty fantastic, she was feeling disconnected, and didn't really add anything to that, and I think that comes up from time to time. Let's take a look at some of the important aspects of that and some related issues to that. This is a good place to start.

We can't literally be disconnected. We never were disconnected, in any real sense, except that our energy isn't really in alignment. So what we do in the Reconnection or in energy alignment, it doesn't really matter which, is that connection from divine. I'm looking for the manifestation files, while we're talking, because I think that might be useful here. It's not actually possible to be disconnected. We can, however, feel disconnected. This is a very, very different thing.

So why do we feel disconnected? Remember that there are five major levels of being: Physical, Emotional, Mental, Spiritual or Buddhic, and the Atma or Awareness plane. Feelings are close to the bottom. They are only the second plane up, and our feelings are reflections of our thoughts, so again, feelings are an important feedback mechanism. They tell us if we're headed in a good direction or not. If we are doing something that is just in the completely wrong direction for us, our feelings are warning us, "Danger, danger" in the same way that your hand on a hot stove would warn you of that.

The thing to do is not to wallow in it, which is what we tend to do, isn't it? We wallow in it, "I feel so terrible. Everything is going wrong," so we start to focus entirely on how we aren't feeling good, and energy flows where attention goes. If we're paying attention to that and we're feeding that, you're going to create a whole pile of it and you're going to have yourself quite a field day with that. It's just going to get worse and worse, and spiral out of control, like my friend who likes to say, "Did you have a bad day or did you have a bad moment and milk it all day?"

The thing to do, first of all, is to be aware of that process. The same thing is true in reverse. When we feel terrific, you're doing something that's feeding your spirit. You are you are in love. You are in gratitude and appreciation, and consequently, it feels terrific. This is exactly the perfect direction to go. It's why it's important to look at not simply what do we want, but what do we love. It's too easy to lie to ourselves about what we want because most of us have taught ourselves to want what we think we can have, not what we really want. Again, that's an awareness thing.

I saw, also on Facebook for all the world to see, so I hope it's okay to share, since everybody already knows, Selena shared that her day had taken a left turn when she wanted to go right, but she was aware of it. She was writing that she saw exactly where the mistakes were and what was going on, and what needed to change, and that's perfect. It takes time to get control of all of these things and to learn how to do these things, and it takes practice. So, simply being aware is a really, really important first step.

The next thing to recognize about this is that when you're feeling disconnected, remind yourself that that's not actually true, and use the connection. It's still there. Just because there are clouds, there are still stars. So you get quiet, and understand that emotions come from our thoughts. You need to change the quality of your thoughts. If you're feeling disconnected, that thought energy is in between your feelings and spirituality. This is, I think, maybe the number one reason we all spin our wheels so much.

There is no way to wrap your head around spirituality and awareness. There is no way to do it. You cannot do it. You will always drive yourself nuts because it's at a faster vibration than mental thought energy. It is literally beyond it in the same way that you can't get through algebra based on emotion. It's the wrong energy, so you have to let go and you have to open up.

If you find your head spinning, it sounds silly and the first thing you'll do is say, "I can't do this." That's what I did. It's a wonderful tool. Open up the lid of your head, take out your brain, set it on the nightstand, let it sit there and go nuts, and you go about your day, and literally do this. Our conscious minds are only 5% of our mind, and yet we try to run everything with that 5% of our mind, and the rest of the mind is faster and more powerful. The middle brain, the lower brain, they are much faster, they are much more powerful. They can handle amounts of energy and data that are just astounding; way, way, way beyond our conscious brain. Learn to use these brains, and you can't do it by over-thinking things.

Overwhelm, fear and emotions tell you that you are over-thinking things. You have instincts. Trust them. And understand I'm going to use my whole brain, not just the little 5% that is so slow. You step back and understand that you need to get out of your conscious mind to use your entire brain. You need to get out of your conscious mind to access your intuition, and you need to get into your intuition to access awareness and connection.

This all takes practice. Start by just understanding and being aware. This is a very powerful thing to recognize. I got reminded of this, but powerfully so. I just came from a conference in San Diego last week on enlightened business. I heard a couple of remarkable speakers, including Tim Kelly, who was doing incredible work at the top level in major businesses on this new paradigm in business. I was looking at this more or less as a retreat, to get out of my typical space and to try to work through some of the things that I'm trying to work through.

Of course, a day like this starts by spending my day in airports and on airplanes, so never the most relaxing environment. I had a connecting flight in Chicago. I was already tired. I was walking through the airport, through O'Hare, the way you walk through airports, especially a large one like that, very rapidly walking through the crowds, trying to find my gate. I rounded a corner and I swear to you, six feet in front of me was a column, two-and-a-half feet wide, with letters a good four inches high on it that says, "Emerson, consider it solved."

I was half tired and this is what I ran into. Okay, the universe apparently feels that some of us need bigger signs and more apparent signs than others. I walked to the very next column, maybe 15 feet later, exactly my worry. It said, literally, "It's never been done before." The next column said, "Emerson, consider it solved. It's never been done before." It continues and gets into the actual amazing things that this company does.

Anyway, I got to the lecture and days later, I was at the lecture with Tim Kelly. He reminded me something I knew but I didn't really wrap my head around, that top business leaders spend a large portion of their day, one or two hours of their work day, in prayer and meditation. They spend an hour or two in prayer or meditation; not as an escape, not as a break, but to get the answers that they cannot get from their conscious brain. It is literally a conscious strategy that they use to get the answers they don't have. A number of famous people have done this; Thomas Edison; Bob Ford used to deliberately take naps for ideas, and things like this.

Tim Kelly pointed out then, "The moment you have a desire, the plan already exists at the same time, instantly. This is what pure potential is. There is no other way for something that comes from the spark of the divine, except for true potentiality. So there already is a plan. Your job, then, is to get quiet and listen to what it is. So two important things; the answer to your problem exists instantly. Instantly. The only reason there is a problem at all is that we aren't listening.

The closest thing we have to problems is be calm and listen. There are so many stories that people share about this, once they learn how to do this powerfully, but like anything else, it takes practice. It's a muscle. You need to get in, roll up your sleeves, try it and do it for a while.

It's not actually possible to be disconnected. That's one thing. The second thing is use your connection. It is there.

A third thing you can do, you have all been through, already, an energy alignment and/or a Reconnection. You know what it feels like, and that is something that is there always. The whole time-space thing; once you've experienced something once, it's yours. You can lie down, close your eyes, breathe and go through the memory of that process and how that felt, and in so doing, you will be flowing energy, yourself, through all those tasks. You will, yourself, be awakening all those connections. We open all of that and we access all of that, and you can do this very powerfully.

One of the first things that happens in energy alignment is that the brain becomes so very, very calm. That's because you are working through those knots that we usually put there. The higher frequency doesn't recognize those blockages. The same thing; in the last Q&A call we talked about a technique for accessing your intuition. One of the very first things that happens is your conscious brain energy just shrinks to its proper proportion because you're working with much faster vibrations. But if you put your attention on the feelings and the thoughts, that's where your energy is going to be and you are going to "feel" disconnected only because that's where you're focusing.

Kwan Yin Healing has four pillars: clarity, connection, coherence and change. The clarity part, this is about getting honest and getting aware about what's going on, understanding what's going on. The connection part is what we have just been talking about, the connection to a higher power and through all levels. Remember that if you're not feeling a connection at the highest levels, you are disconnected at the Physical, Emotional, Mental and the Buddhic levels, right? There is resonance between all of those and you can look at things. What's going on in my physical space? What's going on in my mind? My mental practice, my emotional practice, my spiritual practice? Where am I spending attention here?

Coherence; all those different levels have to vibrate together coherently. If they're not, then even though they're connected, they aren't going to work well in the same way that your car has all the parts but they're not working well together.

The last one is change. If you want things to happen differently, you have to do different things. We have to make changes. Another point I want to raise on this I don't think we've talked about yet. We talked about things like the Law of Attraction, intent and things like that, but there is also a Law of Gestation. Anyone in healthy order can create life. As long as you're a mature, sexual adult, you can create life, but it takes nine months because of the gestation period. It's not hard to create vegetables, but there is a gestation period. The same thing is true of anything. The vegetable is going to happen from the moment that seed is in damp ground, but it still takes time. If it didn't take time, it wouldn't grow properly.

You think back to the Hero's Journey and the trials, the trials are not blockages. They're not just to prevent us from our desires, but they're to make sure that we have the tools and effective growth we need at each stage before we move on. That's a very, very crucial part. That's what the Law of Gestation does, and make sure that you're healthy. Look what happens with a premature child, for example, or if vegetables grow too quickly, they can't support the produce. If a tree grows too quickly, it's very, very vulnerable to storms.

So the Law of Gestation is a major blessing. Time takes time and it's a good thing that time takes time. This is the reason for living as we do in a physical existence. It slows things down so that we can learn to work with them. If everything happened for us at the level of the divine spark, we would be like the child of the sun god, burning up the heavens because we just aren't ready for that yet.

The other thing I thought, when I was listening to this connection, is I can tell you two things with mere certainty. The first would be that whenever I hear something like that, two things have stopped happening. One is the practice of gratitude has stopped. If the practice of gratitude is continued, we would never be in that situation because gratitude, by itself, is a positive thought energy. It is directed energy towards things we want and appreciate.

I love what my dad shared with me, "What if you woke up tomorrow and you only had the things you're grateful for today?" It's a powerful energy. It is a crucial part of a healthy, vibrant, growing existence. We must, must, must embrace that. We must be grateful for the things we have or there is just no way to move on from there because we're beginning from a mindset of scarcity. We've already set up the walls, so it's not positive to manifest from that point.

The second thing that I can say, with utmost certainty, that's fallen by the wayside is starting the day with a spiritual practice, whatever it is; prayer, meditation, reading, tree contemplation, green tea. It doesn't matter. Whatever it is, it apparently has stopped or we wouldn't feel disconnected. This is how important those things are, and I did the same thing when I first started this. It worked great for a while and then it wasn't working. Then I would realize later, "What happened to my meditation practice?" I would get back to it, and it took me a few loops of this before I finally realized, okay, this is not an 'if I have time' thing. This is crucial.

One of the greatest blessings of my life, right now, is at the beginning of this summer, because I wanted to rethink a whole bunch of things and I had time to do it starting mid spring, I upped my morning spiritual practice from 20 minutes to two hours. A lot of that is positive reading; 30 minutes of meditation, morning coffee, and it was so powerful and the change is so profound. When I got into my "busy season" I decided I could not afford to cut that back.

Listen to what I just said carefully. When I got into my busy season, I decided I could not afford to cut that back, and do you know what? I have more time than I have ever had. It's not for a big debt; progress not perfection. I'm still working through the stuff, as you are, but a stunning difference. Just like those business leaders, where part of their day is prayer and meditation, part of my day is starting with two hours of prayer, meditation and positive reading, and it has to. I can't imagine my day without that. Then, even if I start off not in the best place, I have all that powerful help to help me with that.

It's crucial. You can't miss a day. So I would suggest those things. You need a daily practice of gratitude, even if it's small things. You need a daily spiritual practice to start from that clean focal point of your day, or things just build and soon you start looking at negative energy, and soon you start feeling disconnected again.

One final technique is if you really find yourself kind of feeling lost and you need some help, sit down in meditation, close your eyes and surround yourself with however many you can think of that are appropriate to you – six of the most famous people you can think of who would be good at that particular problem, and literally ask them their advice. That energy is there. You'll be amazed at how stunningly powerful this is.

I would also add to this the importance of a vision board, if you've never tried this. Vision boards are powerful ways because our larger brain, other than the conscious brain, works more with pictures than with language, and a vision board very powerfully focuses us on where we're going rather than where we are or where we're afraid we might be going. A long, long answer to a question that wasn't maybe specifically asked, but I think it's something very important to talk about.

The question then becomes do I want to? Do I want to feel connected? That change aspect.

Now the last thing to do about this is; that whole process of going through the Kwan Yin journey focuses on these steps, but it's a very comprehensive, very thorough and very packed program. It's not something where you can possibly absorb all of it, just going through quickly. So it's very important, if you're serious about this, to go back through and say, "Okay, I have the overview, now what I need to do is go back to lesson one, go back through that content and the strategy, and the recording again slowly." Spend a week reading through it slowly, carefully, step-by-step, or even longer. Then go onto the second module, and the third and the fourth, and so forth, so that you can start going in more deeply, in more depth, because you know more things than you did before. You will catch more things than you caught before. You will understand things you didn't understand before, the first time through.

Many of you wrote to say things like, "I see how the pieces fit together in a way I never did before." You will see more of that as you go through this; things that were at first wild ideas will become practical, realities, steps and strategies for you, and you will add your own understanding to this. So it's very important. Go back through that again. It's very comprehensive. It's not intended to go through once.

The next step, after going through that, is to also understand that as we grow, we go through, as my mentor used to tell me, peeling an onion. The first time, it's very mysterious. "I thought I had this. Things were going so great and now I'm back to feeling the way I did before. What's wrong?" Nothing is wrong at all. What has happened is you have completely dealt with the outer layer or layers, and very successfully, and now you're looking at inner layers, that were hidden before, underneath those outer problems. So this is actually a very positive thing. The thing to do with those inner layers is, "Okay, I've been here before. I know the steps. Let's go back to step one," which is another thing to go through the whole program again.

The first time it's, "I thought I had this," but that's kind of like saying, "Man, I thought I cleaned my house and now it's dusty again. I thought I ate dinner and now I'm hungry again. Jeez, I bathed yesterday and now I need a bath again. Man." It's just part of the reality of life. After you do that a few times, you'll get accustomed to it. You recognize the process. It's just not a big deal. You recognize it for what it is and you make very, very rapid growth and understand things.

Even as you go through your stuff, you'll find that those ups and downs become gentle bumps that outside people won't even hardly notice you're going through anymore. It's very important, after going through all these, to look at that bonus module, Nine Steps to Manifestation. These are ways to take all that understanding and change the connection, and make it intensely practical, so take another look at that module as well.

In step one of that module, we went back to look at the levels of being and really understanding the 333 process. It's a lot easier to go through your mind, emotional and physical stuff if you understand that this is a reflection of what's happening, that the Atma intuition tells you that, and that soul body is a reflection of a divine potential spark and forms. Then it's really hard to feel disconnected when we really understand the significance of that connection.

Again, coming back to the supreme importance of a spiritual practice and meditation, this is part of who we are. The second step of that process is the role of desire. Going right back to the beginning, what is it you want? Look at it again. It may have changed. It probably has changed. Why do you want that? Why do you want that? Why do you want that? Do this again. What is it you love? Why do you love that? Why do you love that? If you're too busy, ask yourself why are you too busy to spend some time looking at what you want and what you love. There's something wrong. Something is out of balance here. Change that. Desire is not a bad thing, but we've learned to quench our desires, to squash them, and it takes some practice to uncover them again and to really get at the self-honest truth.

Then to know that if you want it, you can have it. There is a clear path. Get quiet and listen to it.

Step three is service. If you're wrapped up in your own head, call somebody. Find out how their day is going. Help them. Go volunteer somewhere. Figure out what you can do to give to other people. Go on a forum and see who's having problems and help them solve their problems. It will get you out of your own head. It will get the energy flowing again. Also, how does what you want serve other people? Abundance is a river. If there is continually energy flowing in, it also needs to continually flow out. It needs to be channeled or we don't have a river; we have floods, swamps or droughts.

Step four is belief. I don't mean a sense of blind faith, but rather a knowing. Belief determines our actions, our actions determine our experiences, our experience determines our belief. If you believe something can't be done, you're right. It can be done; you're right. And science has stepped up to the plate on this. Bruce Lipton has actually pointed out the moment that you decide something you could do, literally your cell chemistry changes. Literally – your cell chemistry changes. When you decide there is a way to do this, literally your brain changes. We can measure these changes. You will literally rewire your brain chemistry, your brain circuits the moment you make those decisions. It's phenomenal how powerfully we create in instants. We really are that powerful but we have to learn to manage our thoughts, and that includes beliefs, and that includes focus.

As Abraham repeats, "A belief is simply a thought you continue to hold." You need to focus and hold that thought, and to be grateful for that. If you believe something, and the course is a plan, and you listen and follow what you're told, that is something to be grateful for, and that adds all the more power.

Step five, beware of overwhelm. Usually here, we need to focus. I recently laid out my plan for Kwan Yin Healing for the next 15 months. I spent some time on it. It was part of the product of the San Diego get-away. I was talking to my business coach last week, and while I went through all the realizations I had come to and what this plan was, it was the fruit of so much effort and he said to me, "I don't think I have ever heard you so clear and so simple." Wow, he's right. Suddenly, there was a focus and as soon as I had a focus, everything else is just details.

I'll tell you a secret about overwhelm that has taken me way too long to learn. If even then there are just too many things to do, stop doing them all yourself. If it's a business thing, where is the help you should be getting to get this? If it's a home thing, what are you doing that your children should be doing? If it's teaching, what are you doing that the student should be doing? What are you doing that shouldn't be on your plate at all? What are you doing that could be a communal effort, if you reached out for help? That's it.

When we're trying to be all things all at once, you're trying to be the divine. It's a team effort. You have to work with other people and get results to other people, if you want to be spiritually successful. Connection and team is how it works.

Step six is manifestation, choosing our limits. You are limited by space and time, as long as you're going to have a physical existence. That means you have to make choices. On the one hand, desire, you can choose whatever you want. On the other hand, you do have to choose, and choosing is going to create limits. You can't do anything, but you can decide what they are.

Step seven, where are you running against other people? Bless them. These are the challenges in the Hero's Journey; the trials you need to work through. These are the skillsets that you need to acquire to move forward successfully. Thank the universe for these because they're saving your ass. It's making sure that you're ready.

Step eight, after you're done the allowing. We don't have any of the flow being dammed up. Where is it going? You need to direct it. Energy flows where attention goes. This is the part people used to usually say, "You need to set very clear intentions, specific amounts by specific dates." Yes, this is where you're setting those exact plans, but it's not the first step.

Usually people jump to this too quickly. I will tell you, to state these goals is intense. Even if it sounds like, "I'm lying to myself. It's a fantasy." No, you have to get yourself into the energy. "I will make $10,000 a month," or whatever your goal is. You need to change that, "I am making $10,000 a month already, right now." You have to get yourself into that state, and then go back to your intuition, "And the steps I'm following are these." You need a plan; otherwise it's just a wish. You need to see yourself where you are. Visualize yourself where you're going, who you're with; all of those details.

There are so many stories of musicians, athletes, business people who visualized where they were going and what they were doing in extremely concrete details. Not as they wished, but they saw themselves there, picking up that Olympic Gold medal. They saw themselves at every part. Make it real. Put yourself there. Imagination. Turn to pictures. Get out of your head. Access all of your brain. You are such powerful creators, but most of us are creating our own chaos. Simply by not creating your chaos, you start allowing more powerful things to happen, and then by focusing in positive direction, you can very quickly realize things that you thought were impossible.

I'll give you an example. I have a pet project. I saw somebody at Harvard or MIT, I don't remember which. Some engineering students, as a project, went to a village in Africa that, as many villages there do, had a problem with getting fresh water. There is no good source for fresh water but the air humidity is very high. They actually made this billboard-looking-like contraption that pulls humidity out of the air and it supplies fresh water for the entire village. I thought this was really, really cool, and somebody should do something.

I was thinking on the plane to San Diego, money is not a very big motivator for me, but what would I do if I came by a very large sum of money? I thought I would fund projects like that. I was thinking somebody should do something like that. That's what I would do. I would run that down and see if we can't put this in more villages. Then later, I was thinking, wait a second. All the details are there, the knowledge is there. It's been done once. These are all known things. All that needs to happen now is to pull together the resources and direct it into making that happen.

I certainly know people who know people who have influence. What I'm getting at is what was impossible that morning, suddenly I realized was not only possible, it was possible that day. From there, it becomes a choice. Write an email, pick up the phone, and get the ball rolling. Anybody could do this. That's how close we are to creating things, especially once we get out of trying to do everything by ourselves and we're willing to step up into part of a team. Things happen in collaboration. That's where the energy is. That's where the power is. I hope that's helpful.

Ilene also sent me a question, although it's not really a question. She says, "During the last six months, the ebb and flow of the intensity of this new energy, for lack of a better word, has been interesting." Actually, that's a good word. "There are rhythms that don't correspond to my practice or devotion, or even diligent thought monitoring. Even though I can hear the frequencies when I'm quiet, it doesn't seem to help those moments of feeling out of sync with the universe. On the flip side, Tuesdays remain prime time for those ah-ha moments here. It is as if a window opens and it is so easy to get it. Your thoughts, ideas and suggestions of getting through those valleys would be appreciated. Gratitude and love."

Good signature. Gratitude and love to you too, Ilene. All right, so the first part of this question we've been talking about already; the ebb and flow, the rhythms that don't correspond, I can hear the frequencies when I'm quiet. What she's talking about is you can literally hear this energy. It's like a very high pitch. It's different than ringing in the ears. You can tell the difference, but it doesn't help those moments of feeling out of sync in the universe. Again, this is a feeling, so it's pointing out that you're a little bit incongruent. The way to do that is to change your thoughts and to go back through all the things we just said about the connection.

Here is the wonderful thing. On the flip side, Tuesdays remain prime time for those ah-ha moments here. What she's talking about here is Ilene and her daughters, Heather and Tesla, would get together every Tuesday when we were having our sessions, and that was like a family energy thing, and it was very transformative, and after the Kwan Yin Journey course ended, they elected to continue getting together on Tuesdays, which is a wonderful practice. When their daughter, Grace, returned from India, they immediately noticed the change in energy in the house.

Here are a couple of things. Being reminded of just how real and powerful this is. I know there's a nice story that goes with this. Before her daughters got involved, Ilene had done one of her days of her energy alignment and, immediately afterwards, her daughter walked in and said, "Mom, what happened to you? You're glowing." We're dealing with some very powerful things here, so adjust to that. Accept that. But what she's talking about here is the same thing as a daily spiritual practice. It sets up a space for that. It's a grounding moment. That's what it's for and it was a fantastic idea, once she thought of it. It's a fantastic idea now.

This is the purpose and the heart of routine in spiritual practice. Daily spiritual practice grows. It just does. Getting together with other people, it gets us out of our own thinking and into different thinking.

There's a wonderful book, it's a very quick read, by Spencer Johnson, called Peaks and Valleys. He talks about peaks and valleys. It's an allegory about a young man going up to seek this older man on a mountain, and a mentor. It challenges how he's seeing him, how a change in perspective changes that, and how he brings that back to his daily life, but then, after a while, it doesn't work and the mistakes creep in. We're still the same people.

We say in early recovery, "Why isn't my life dramatically better?" The saying is if you take a drunken horse thief and you sober him up, now you have a sober horse thief. There is still work to be done. We're not horse thieves, but nonetheless, who we are, there is still work to be done there, step-by-step. If you walk 20 miles into the forest, you have a 20-mile walk out of the forest. That's just reality, and that's okay. We can walk out in intense awareness.

To understand that our journeys have purpose; like on the Hero's Journey, the point isn't to escape into magic and awareness for ourselves. The point of the Hero's Journey is to take those gifts back to the village and to learn to share those with others. Again, the point of enlightenment isn't enlightenment for oneself; it's enlightenment for the world, compassion for the world, joy for the world, and to bring those things back. One of the ways to do this as well is to get out of ourselves and to share different compassion to the world; to share with the world, to help others with the world.

I could easily run a business with my knowledge, just putting together e-books, very quickly throwing them up on various topics and selling them, and I could work very quickly, very rapidly and with very little complication. I could probably be more successful, actually, but the thing is I would much rather roll up my sleeves, get in and look at what is it that people want, where are they having trouble, why are they having trouble, and work past that. That is far more rewarding work and it's far more rewarding work because I learn so much more doing that.

My associate, Marina Ormes of Astrology Heals, when we get together and talk, there are things where she's ahead of me and there are places where I'm ahead of her, both personally and business-wise. What happens when we work together is that we level the other one up to that instantly, right away, saving each of us months of work and progress. That also means we often need a little emotional space to make that adjustment, and that's okay, but the option would be to learn everything by ourselves and to go through all the challenges that we would have to go by ourselves, and what would happen is we would give up before we got to the goal. It would be too much.

When we learn to connect with other people, we make very rapid progress. Who is already doing what I would like to do? Even if it's somebody famous, you would be amazed how easy it is to get access to people when you go about it in a respectful way, in a good way, in a way that's helping.

I hope some of this helps. We don't have any callers, and those are the only questions I have. It's been close to an hour here and I guess I will bring this to a close for now. This is the last of our bonus calls.

I would remind you that Six Days, Six Sessions, Six C's for Success, The Kwan Yin Path is starting on October 20th, and it's a free set of completely new six teleseminars. Listen to them yourself, but of course, invite friends. Let's pack this thing. Instead of free offerings all the time, these are going to be rare events, twice a year, so this isn't going to happen again for half a year. Get people into this. In November, it will be the re-launch of the Kwan Yin Journey. People should get into the Kwan Yin Path, these six teleseminars for free, and then they'll know if it's something they want to move ahead with, yes or no, and whether it's appropriate for them.

I invite you, very much, to share your experiences and to get people a taste of all of this. We're going to be looking at living abundance, in terms of what does it mean to live abundantly, not simply in terms of cash, but resources, time and love. We're really going to get into the nuts and bolts of that. We're going to look at emotional challenges. We're going to look at stress, overwhelm, fear, uncertainty. We're going to look at spiritual growth, bringing this into the real world, finding balance; how do we accomplish all that? We are going to look at how to get unstuck, how to manifest.

Anytime we're stuck, it's very difficult because we've already done what we know, so by definition, we are missing pieces at that point. Then, we'll really get into the last part, if healing isn't magic, where is my miracle? Going through the four pillars of the Kwan Yin Path in detail and giving people the option to continue, if that's appropriate for them.

I certainly hope you'll join me and I hope that you will invite many, many people to invite many, many people as well. We can handle 1000 people on the call. I would love to pack it and to share this as much as possible, as is possible, with those six sessions. It has truly been my pleasure to work with each of you, to serve you, to help you on your path. I sincerely hope that I'll be seeing more of you.

In November, incidentally, I'll be launching a program for those people who need and want intensive one-on-one work in implementing these. There will be more about that coming up in November but, in the meantime, I wish you all well, I love all of you very deeply, and God bless, take care, realize your dreams and share it with others. Namaste.
